Halton Reads Festival

Halton Reads Festival starts this week and the aim is to share the love of reading across Halton. Many activities have been organised for the children, including an amazing line-up of authors for a celebration of reading for pleasure. The classes will be able to view an author video and engage in a Q&A session.

Alongside this, Halton are taking part in a 'minute count' and aiming to reach half a million minutes of reading in two weeks. We will submit the reading minutes from our school and I wonder which class will have the highest total?

As well as aiming to break the reading minute record, Halton Reads is looking to 'get trending' across Twitter. Watch out for the tweets from Westfield!

Lastly, they would like to see as many children as possible joining the library. If you would like us to register your child, then please contact the school office. Lets get reading!

#HaltonReads Festival

Win a £10 gift voucher in our 'Where are you reading?' competition!

How to enter? Email school a photo of your child reading in the most imaginative (but safe) place in your home or garden.

Mrs T Vickery, one of our Governors, will judge the competition on Friday at 2pm.

Please confirm on the email that you give your consent for the photo to be shared on our website, our social media and HaltonReads twitter feed.
